AN attempt to compile a list of the Harvard men who gave their services to the United States Government during the war with Spain convinced the Editors of The Crimson early in the autumn that some sort of supplement would be necessary. As the names came in, the supplement grew until it seemed best to publish it in its present form, and to insert photographs of the men who died.

It is to be hoped that a final and authoritative war roll will soon be published, but for the time being this pamphlet is issued in the belief that it may prove useful or acceptable to Harvard men.

The expenses of its publication have become so considerable that to distribute it free is impossible.

Grateful acknowledgments are due to the Deputy Keeper of the College Archives, Mr. W. G. Brown, '91, to the designer of the cover, and to the author of the paragraphs on page 3, who wishes to be nameless.

AS it was in '61, so in the early spring of '98, in fewer numbers perhaps, because the need was less, but with just such a strong spirit as before, the men of Harvard University enlisted in the forming regiments for the front. Some went as commissioned officers, some as privates; some were in the infantry, others in the cavalry, others wore sewed to the sleeve of their shirts the red cross of the hospital corps; everywhere throughout the vast extent of armies, in Cuba, in Porto Rico, or left behind to sweat and toil in weariness, men we had known and men we had heard of, were they placed in command of companies, or in the third relief of the guard, were doing what ought to be done.

One man, a Senior, who enlisted as a private in the very beginning, was given a commission before there had been any fighting; and when the fighting began, he was promoted. By a brave regiment he was called a brave man.

There are no more battles now. The men are returning and we see them about the college as before, but of course not all who went in the spring; for the work that these men had set out to do would not permit of that. And to those whom we shall not see here, either this year or the next, who fought as their teaching had told them, and did it well, to them full honor is owing, and to them is given in sadness the great love of this University of Harvard. Hollister, Furness, Sanders, Crapo, Adsit, Lahman, Henshaw, Wheeler, Stover, Talcott—they are the men who have gone. They died in service, and when they were buried, United States troops stood at attention.

OLIVER BRIDGES HENSHAW, '93.

OLIVER BRIDGES HENSHAW.

 OLIVER BRIDGES HENSHAW, '93, died at Camp Alger, Va., on July 4, of an injury received while serving as a private in Troop C, a cavalry organization of the National Guard of New York, locally known as "The Brooklyn Invincibles." He was kicked by his file leader's horse during a dress parade of his regiment on July 3, receiving the injury from which he died the next day.

Henshaw, the son of William Henshaw, was born in Boston on December 27, 1870, but spent most of his early life in Cambridge, where he attended the public schools. He entered Harvard with the Class of Ninety-three, and soon attained a high standing in his chosen branches of study, modern languages and philosophy. After his graduation he was appointed Instructor of Philosophy in the University of California, where he remained for two years, receiving his A. M. there. He then secured a travelling fellowship from Harvard, and spent a year at Berlin acquiring German and studying Philosophy at the University for his Ph. D. For his degree he wrote on "The Principle of Individuation." After his return he became a professor in the Cosmopolitan University, and took considerable part in forming the Cosmopolitan Magazine. Besides his work on this magazine, he wrote for the International Bureau of Information. He left his books on philosophy, numbering about two hundred volumes, to the Harvard College library.

PHILIP ASHLEY CRAPO.

PHILIP ASHLEY CRAPO, L. S. '94, a private in Company F and clerk of the regimental quartermaster, Fiftieth Iowa Infantry, died at St. Luke's Hospital, Jacksonville, Florida, on Sunday, September 18, of typhoid fever contracted in camp.

Crapo, son of Hon. Philip M. Crapo, was born in Burlington, Iowa, July 17, 1873. He passed through the public schools and attended the High School for a half year. In the fall of 1887 he entered Phillips Exeter Academy and completed his course with credit in 1891. He then entered Harvard College but, deciding to study immediately for his selected profession, was transferred to the Law School, from which he graduated in 1894. He was interested in college athletics, and at one time was manager of the base-ball team.

Returning to Burlington, Crapo passed the Iowa Bar examinations, ranking as one of the two best of twenty-five candidates. Soon he was admitted to the Nebraska Bar and practised at Omaha for a year. In the spring of 1897, he removed to New York City. After passing the required examinations and devoting some time to writing a short treatise of merit entitled "Science of Money," he began practice, which he continued until the outbreak of the war.

Crapo returned to Burlington to organize a company to go to the war, but the conditions at that time not being favorable for another call for troops, he enlisted as a private, early in July, and, taking charge of several other recruits, hastened to join Company F, Fiftieth Iowa Infantry, then in camp at Jacksonville, Fla. After drilling for two months, Crapo was detailed as clerk of the regimental quartermaster. While serving in this capacity, he was taken sick with malarial fever. A furlough to go home was urged upon him, but he refused because of his work. Soon typhoid fever developed. He was taken to St. Luke's Hospital on September 2, and died sixteen days later.

PHILIP ASHLEY CRAFO, L. S. '94.

STANLEY HOLLISTER, '97.

STANLEY HOLLISTER.

STANLEY HOLLISTER, '97, died at the army hospital at Fortress Monroe, Va., on the evening of August 17, of typhoid fever contracted while serving in Cuba as a private in Troop A of the Rough Riders. Wounds received in battle compelled him to go to the hospital before the fever developed.

Stanley Hollister was twenty-three years old at the time of his death. His home was in Santa Barbara, California, where he prepared for college at the Berkeley School. He entered Harvard with the Class of Ninety-seven, and was in the Law School when he joined the army. He was always prominent in college athletics, being a substitute on the '94 'Varsity crew, and a regular oar in the crews of '95 and '96. He was a member of the Institute of 1770 and the Hasty Pudding Club.

Hollister and a number of friends, among whom were Sanders, Goodrich, Scull, Sayre, Bull, Scudder, Murchie, Dean and Coleman, were the first Harvard men to be selected by Colonel Roosevelt to serve in his regiment of Rough Riders. They went South on May 2 and joined the regiment at San Antonio, Texas. Hollister was assigned to Troop A. He served with his regiment in all its engagements in the Santiago campaign. At the charge of San Juan Hill, he was twice wounded, in the breast by a piece of a shell and in the thigh by a bullet. After ten days in the field hospital at Siboney, he was brought North to Fortress Monroe. His wounds were healing and his strength returning, but typhoid then developed and caused his death.

WILLIAM HUNTINGTON SANDERS.

WILLIAM HUNTINGTON SANDERS, of the Class of Ninety-seven, died of malarial fever and dysentery on August 12, while on board the hospital ship Los Angeles, in Santiago Harbor. He was a private in Troop B of the Rough Riders, with whom he served in all their actions of the Cuban campaign.

Sanders was a resident of Salem, Mass., where he prepared for college. In 1893 he entered the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where he remained for one term and was then transferred to the Lawrence Scientific School. He graduated from Harvard in 1897, a prominent and popular member of his class. He played on his Freshman base-ball and foot-ball teams, and, in his Senior year, was manager of the Varsity base-ball team. He was a member of the Institute of 1770 and of the Hasty Pudding Club.

On May 2, Sanders with some friends went to Washington, where they immediately enlisted in the Rough Riders and proceeded to San Antonio, Texas. The Harvard men were distributed among the various commands, Sanders being assigned to Troop B. Sanders was in all the battles of his regiment. He had many narrow escapes but was never wounded. He was always exposed, especially in the assault of San Juan Hill, when he was Colonel Roosevelt's orderly. On July 6, Sanders had a slight attack of malaria, and a second more severe one on July 23. He was ordered to the General Hospital at Santiago on July 30. But no ambulance was sent for him, and accordingly his tent-mate Dean mounted him on a horse and took him to Santiago. But they could not find the hospital. Dean therefore left Sanders in charge of the steward of the Marine Hospital with the latter's promise to have him taken to a hospital boat in the Bay before sundown. But the promise was not kept. Sanders lay on the piazza of the Marine Hospital for two days, feeble, without remedies or care. He was then removed to the ship Los Angeles. But it was too late. He died August 12, and was buried in Salem with full military honors.

WILLIAM HUNTINGTON SANDERS, '97.

WILLIAM ARIEL TALCOTT, L. S. '97.

WILLIAM ARIEL TALCOTT, JR.

WILLIAM ARIEL TALCOTT, Jr., L. S. '97, died of malarial fever at the Larkin House, Watch Hill, R. I., on the morning of September 1. He was a corporal of Company M, Seventy-first New York, and contracted the fever while serving in Cuba with his regiment.

Although a member of the First Corps of Cadets, Boston, Talcott, at the first rumor of war, enlisted as a private in the Seventy-first New York, a regiment he felt sure would be sent to the front. He soon won his corporal's stripes, and later, in the field before Santiago, he was given a second lieutenancy in the regular army, being assigned to duty with the Seventh Infantry. He went through the Cuban campaign safely, while the soldier beside him in the battle of San Juan was wounded six times. But he was stricken with fever on the returning transport, Grand Duchess. He passed through the detention camp at Montauk Point, and as soon as possible was taken by his father to Watch Hill, where his family was spending the summer. There was every hope of his recovery when an unexpected relapse caused his death. The burial took place at Talcott's home in Rockford, Illinois.

Talcott was born February 25, 1875, in Rockford, Illinois. He graduated in 1893 from Amherst, where he was one of the most prominent members of his class. He was leader of the Banjo Club, member of the foot-ball team for three years, and a prominent speaker and scholar. After a year's graduate study at Amherst he came to the Harvard Law School, where he was graduated in 1897. Although ill-health compelled him to spend most of his first year in Europe, he was able to attain a high standard in his Law School work. In January he was admitted to the New York bar and joined the firm of Eaton and Lewis. He became an authority on the constitutionality of game-laws, and wrote several opinions for Forest and Stream.

JAMES THWING FURNESS.

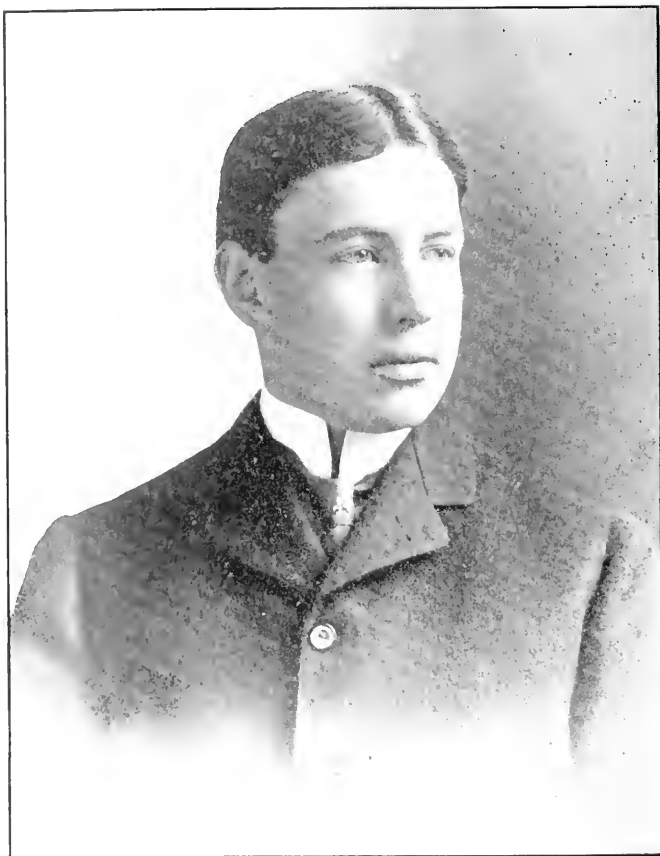

JAMES THWING FURNESS, of the Class of Ninety-eight, died at Camp Cuba Libre, Jacksonville, Florida, on September 11, of typhoid fever, contracted while serving as corporal in Company H of the Forty-ninth Iowa Infantry.

Furness was born September 9, 1876, at Chicago, where he spent most of his life. He was an only son. He prepared for college in the Harvard School of that city and entered Harvard College with the Class of Ninety-eight. He was interested in athletics, a member of the Fencing Club and of the Institute of 1770. Furness left College in April, 1897, to take a position in the freight department of the Iowa Central Railway, at Marshalltown, Iowa, where he remained until his enlistment.

In response to the first call for volunteers, Furness enlisted as a private in Company H of the Forty-ninth Iowa Infantry. He was soon given a corporal's chevrons. His regiment was stationed at Camp Cuba Libre, Jacksonville, throughout the war. In August he contracted the disease which finally caused his death.

JAMES THWING FURNESS, '98.

ROY WALTER STOVER, '98.

ROY WALTER STOVER.

ROY WALTER STOVER, of the Class of Ninety-eight, died at Manila on October 21, of typhoid fever, contracted while serving as sergeant major of the First Regiment of South Dakota Infantry.

At the time of his death Stover was twenty-two years old. His home was in Marengo, Iowa. Although a graduate of the State University of Iowa, he had always been ambitious to secure a degree from Harvard. To this end he entered college in the fall of ninety-six with the Class of Ninety-eight. Stover was much interested in debating, and became a member of the old Harvard Union and later of the University Debating Club, and was one of the men to be chosen at the preliminary trial for the Princeton debate last spring. In the fall of ninety-six, he was the winner of the Founder's Cup in shooting, and a member of the Harvard team in the intercollegiate shoot. It had been his intention to return to Cambridge this fall and enter the Law School. He was one of the enlisted men to be awarded a degree without examination.

Previous to his enlistment in the First South Dakota, Stover had signed to go with Light Battery A, M. V. M., in case they were ordered to the front. When it became apparent that they were not to be mustered into the service, he enlisted as a private in the Dakota regiment. Because of his former military experience and of his thorough ability he was soon appointed regimental sergeant major, the position he held when he died. Stover joined his regiment in May and accompanied it to the Philippines. On his arrival at Cavite, August 30, he was in the best of health. The next news of him was that he had died of fever.

STUART WADSWORTH WHEELER.

STUART WADSWORTH WHEELER, '98, a private in the Philadelphia City Troop, died on October 18 at the Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston from typhoid fever contracted while serving with his troop in Porto Rico.

Wheeler was twenty years old at the time of his death. He entered college from St. Paul's School in the fall of '94. He was immediately taken to the 'Varsity foot-ball squad and played tackle in the Yale and Pennsylvania games when Hallowell was injured. As much was expected of him the next season, the college was greatly disappointed because he was prevented from playing by his college work. In the season of '96, however, he played on the 'Varsity until the Brown game, when he received an injury which prevented him from playing again until the Pennsylvania game. The following year, he entered the Medical School from the College department. He was again on the 'Varsity, and played tackle in the second half of the Yale game. He was a member of the Institute of 1770, the Hasty Pudding Club and Alpha Delta Phi Club.

At the outbreak of the war, Wheeler left the Harvard Medical School to be mustered into the Philadelphia City Troop, U. S. V. Soon after the fall of Santiago the troop was sent to Porto Rico, but before they had seen any active service hostilities came to an end. In September, Wheeler returned to New York with the rest of the Troop on the transport Mississippi; and after spending a few days with his family in Philadelphia, he was sent to Maine to recuperate. While there, the fever which he had contracted in Porto Rico broke out, and he was removed to the Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston. At the first news of his sickness it was not thought that he was in a critical condition. But, weakened by his service, he gradually lost strength, and died on October 18. He was buried with military honors from the Church of the Redeemer, Bryn Mawr, Pa.

NATHANIEL BROWN ADSIT, 1900.

NATHANIEL BROWN ADSIT.

NATHANIEL BROWN ADSIT, of the Class of Nineteen Hundred, died on August 1 at his home in Buffalo, New York. The immediate cause of his death was heart failure, but he had been ill many days with typhoid fever, contracted in the camp of the Rough Riders at Tampa, Fla.

Adsit was born October 20, 1876, at Hornellsville, N. Y., where his home had been for many years before going to Buffalo. He was an only son. He graduated from the Hornellsville High School, and prepared for college at Nichols' School of Buffalo. He had completed his Sophomore year in Harvard College when he enlisted, and was planning to work over into the Scientific School with the view of becoming a railroad construction engineer. He played on his class foot-ball team in 1897 and ran on the winning class relay team last winter. He was a member of the Harvard Engineering Society and the Institute of 1770.

In June, Adsit enlisted as a private in Troop C of the Rough Riders in answer to the second call for Harvard men to join that regiment. He had intended to answer the first call but was dissuaded. He was left behind at Tampa. In the hope that all the regiment would eventually be sent to Cuba, he well performed the disagreeable tasks of a Southern summer camp. At first he was in excellent health. He wrote of the low death rate of his regiment to reassure his friends at home. But suddenly word came that he was ill with fever. He obtained a leave of absence. Alone, weak from sickness and the jolting of the trains, he arrived at his home on July 27. The strain was beyond his constitution. In six days he died. He lived as a man, he died as a man and a soldier, and was buried with soldier's honors.

RALPH WARD LAHMAN.

RALPH WARD LAHMAN, of the Class of Nineteen Hundred, died in Cuba on August 17, of yellow fever contracted while serving as a private in the First Regiment of Illinois Infantry.

Lahman was nineteen years old at the time of his death. His home was in Chicago, where he prepared for college. In the fall of '96 he entered Harvard as a special student, but because of ill health was obliged to leave at the end of his first year. He was an active member of the Freshman Debating Club.

At the outbreak of the war, Lahman was a member of the First Illinois Infantry, but at the first medical examination of the regiment he was rejected. General constitutional weakness was the cause of his rejection. He was passed a few weeks afterwards, however, when the regiment was in camp being recruited to its full quota. He served with his regiment in Cuba, where he contracted the yellow fever which caused his death in the army hospital at Santiago.

RALPH WARD LAHMAN, 1900.

HARVARD ENLISTMENTS.

THE following provisional list of Harvard men who were in the service of the United States Government during the war with Spain is revised and enlarged from those originally published in the Harvard Crimson. Any corrections or additions should be sent to Mr. W. G. Brown, Deputy Keeper of the University Records, Gore Hall, Cambridge. In all cases in which a man was in college before going to a professional school, he is listed with his college class.

Mass Meeting.

TO DECIDE ON A MEMORIAL TO THE HARVARD MEN IN THE WAR.

AS a result of the generally expressed desire of the University, a mass meeting of Harvard alumni and undergraduates was held in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, on the evening of October 21. President Donald of the Senior class presided. He expressed the purpose of the meeting in the following words :

“This meeting has been called in order that a fitting tribute in the form of a lasting memorial may be erected to the memory of the Harvard men who fell in the late war, and in appreciation of those other Harvard men whose lives were not required.”

President Donald then read the following letter from Colonel Roosevelt :

NEW YORK, October 20, 1898.

GENTLEMEN,—Will you tell the members of the undergraduates' meeting that in all sincerity it is absolutely impossible to leave this State now. That alone prevents my being with them. I should rather be with them than at any other meeting, because it does seem to me that Harvard should take some such action as is proposed. I feel closely drawn to all Harvard men ; and how can I help feeling most closely drawn to those who lay with me in the trenches and who fought beside me at Santiago ? Surely Harvard will see that some memorial is erected to those of her sons who gladly gave their young lives when it seemed to them that the country called for the offering.

Faithfully yours,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

President Eliot was next introduced and spoke in full as follows :

“Brother Roosevelt's phrase, ‘Gave his young life,’ is a good one enough, but how much it means ; these youths who died in this Cuban war had given what you all are looking forward to with intense hope, expectation and delight, satisfaction and joy. Life is over with them. For you it is just opening. Imagine for an instant what they have given. It is all done with them, for they cannot experience the joys, the lights, the hope which fills your heart with anticipation. A human life is gone for them.

“What did they give their lives for? We have been asking that question, and sometimes we get an adverse answer. We all notice the sentiment that this war was not worth fighting for; that this war will bring upon the country unforeseen evils; that the young men had no cause to go to this war; that educated young men, in particular, ought to have known better than to have gone to such a war. I do but repeat what I hear. These views seem to me to be unsound, yet if sound, irrelevant; have we no right to question these objections tonight?

“Shall we commemorate the sacrifices of these, our young comrades? What does this building teach? What has it been teaching to the youth of Harvard for thirty years? What does it say to the men who have gone in and out here during their whole college lives? Has it not said to them, it is noble to die for your country? Has it not said to them, if you die for your country your name shall be written up somewhere on the grounds of the college? I, for one, feel that Memorial Hall had said just that to all those who went to this Cuban war last spring. It has said to them, you shall be remembered here if you fall. Now, was there anything about the moral quality of this war which should lead to the disappointment of this hope, to the breaking of that promise? I cannot think so; we do not know today what the issues of this war are to be.

“How much did those young men know about the issues of this war when they went? How much can any generation of any young men probably know about the issues of any war to which they may be summoned by the Government of their country? I am sure the young men themselves did not know anything about the issues of the Civil War; they had no vision of its issue; they went because they loved their country and because the existence of their country seemed to be threatened; they went because they loved the Union and found that that Union was in danger. Now these are elementary instances to which the youth of any nation must respond so long as war is the inevitable method of settling disputes which grow out of human ignorance and passion.

“ Again, what is the real, serious strength of this country among the nations of the earth, when we keep no standing army and but a small navy? Why has the opinion and the word of the United States been respected among the nations of the earth, when to all appearances we were without the means of physically enforcing them ourselves? It is not because in this free country it is proper that when our Government needs the force, the young men spring to arms. The very reason why we have been able to get on with a standing army of 25,000 men among 70,000,000 of people is that foreign nations and our own people believe that when our Government calls for troops the troops would be forthcoming, and that quick, and that without much stopping to reason, or to anticipate the issues of the threatening strife. If in the future this country shall be able to get on well and hold a strong place among the nations of the earth without maintaining such armies and navies as have burdened the other nations of the earth, it will be because the other nations and we ourselves believe that when the Government of this country summons its appeal to battle, the youth shall come. Now this is just what our comrades who had died in this Cuban war did; and I believe that they should be lastingly commemorated on these grounds.

“ But I would not advise that any hasty action be taken with regard to the form of the memorial. On looking back on Memorial Hall I see that it was several years after the close of the Civil War before this building began to rise on this spot, and there were good reasons for the delay in the designing of the tribute. We do not yet know how many graduates and sons of Harvard were enlisted in this war; they keep dying here and here. Let us not be too quick to imagine what form of memorial shall be raised to these friends of ours whose lives have been given in this war. Let us declare here that, so far as in us lies, they shall be worthily commemorated here, but let us wait until we know how many are to be commemorated in this war; let us wait until we know more than we now do about the issues of this war. It is true that the memory of those who fall in any war is affected by the issues of the war. There is no doubt that men hold in remembrance longer and more dearly those who fought in a war which turns out to be a war for civilization, for the progress of mankind. Let us wait, then, until we know something more than we now know about the ultimate issues of the strife in which our comrades fell, but let us absolutely determine that they shall be affectionately and honorably remembered here."

The next speaker introduced was J. E. Norton Shaw, '98, who said:

"The work of commemoration should fall to us since the men who gave their lives were a part of us, and to us, next to their families, the loss comes nearest." Shaw then related a story of Stanley Hollister, when the latter was in the 'Varsity crew, and it seemed admirably to show the spirit that animated the man, who though twice badly wounded in the trenches at San Juan continued bravely fighting to the end. Continuing he said: "The memorial should commemorate not only those who gave their lives for the country, but also those who were left behind in camp, and who did their simple duties faithfully."

Major Higginson was the last speaker of the evening. He said:

"Thirty-four years ago, while our army was lying carelessly at Cedar Creek, in the Shenandoah valley, it was set upon suddenly and almost routed by the Confederates. Sheridan turned the defeat into victory. But in the very moment of triumph Charles Lowell was mortally wounded while leading his men on. His ideal, which, it may be said, the Harvard men in this war have exemplified, was to look strangers in the face and to speak the truth. It is not necessary to speak here of the righteousness of this war. It came and is finished victoriously, for which we are grateful. In the Civil War the Northerners fought to maintain our national integrity and to wipe out our own great national sin — while in this Cuban war we all fought to wipe out the sin of another nation.

“ War is hideous under all circumstances, but this Cuban war has brought us some advantages. Though the Southerners had accepted the results of the Civil War with generosity and real philosophy, yet nothing could have so welded the country together as this foreign war. Think of the old Confederate, General Wheeler, saying : ‘ Ah, you don’t know how good it feels to wear once more the uniform of the United States.’ The war has set forth in strong colors the dauntless, steady qualities of our negro soldiers. It has called out a strong wave of enthusiastic devotion to our country throughout the land. If, as we hope, it has prepared a silent alliance between England and the United States, it has done much toward the peace of the world, for no nation or nations will lightly take up a quarrel with the combined English-speaking peoples.

“ But in any case the wishes, the feelings, the motives of Harvard students seemed to me the same in 1861 and in 1898. I cannot distinguish between them. Last spring the students said, ‘ Our country calls us for the sake of humanity and of good government, and we are going to meet the call. We cannot stop now to consider the causes of the war, else we shall be too late. Good bye.’ They went to serve their country without hesitation or counting of costs. As to conduct in service or deserts, whether it was David Goodrich and his men storming the heights of San Juan, or George Norman fearlessly carrying out Wainwright’s orders in the fierce attack on Cervera’s fleet and in rescuing the drowning Spanish sailors ; whether it was Dr. Burrell or Dr. Bradford planning and toiling day and night to save the sick men ; or Sherman Hoar, seeking out the fever-stricken camps or tending the sick men in railroad stations, or wrestling with Secretary Alger or Surgeon Sternberg for honest care of the soldiers, fighting for others while unconsciously pouring out his life blood until he could no longer stand ; whether it was Louis Frothingham doing patrol duty on his gunboat, or the class poet, Guy Scull, cleaning his horses at Tampa on his class day and longing to be in the fight; whether it was Colonel Wood, once a Harvard medical student, who led his Rough Riders so gallantly in Cuba, and who is now establishing law and order in Santiago; or the future governor of New York State, who throws his whole strength and might into every contest; whether it is the living or the dead—it is all one. They all seized the opportunity and freely gave what they had and what they were, and never counted the cost.

“It is good for people to feel and to act in this way, and to estimate their own value only as what it can accomplish for others. Among many Harvard alumni who have labored in the hospital, three come to my mind—merely as samples. They said to me, ‘It is my vacation and I have time to help. What can I do to help?’ And they went to Cuba or to Montauk Point, where they worked intelligently and unsparingly until the agony was past—and then one word to us, ‘Thank you for the chance.’ That is the true spirit of Harvard.”

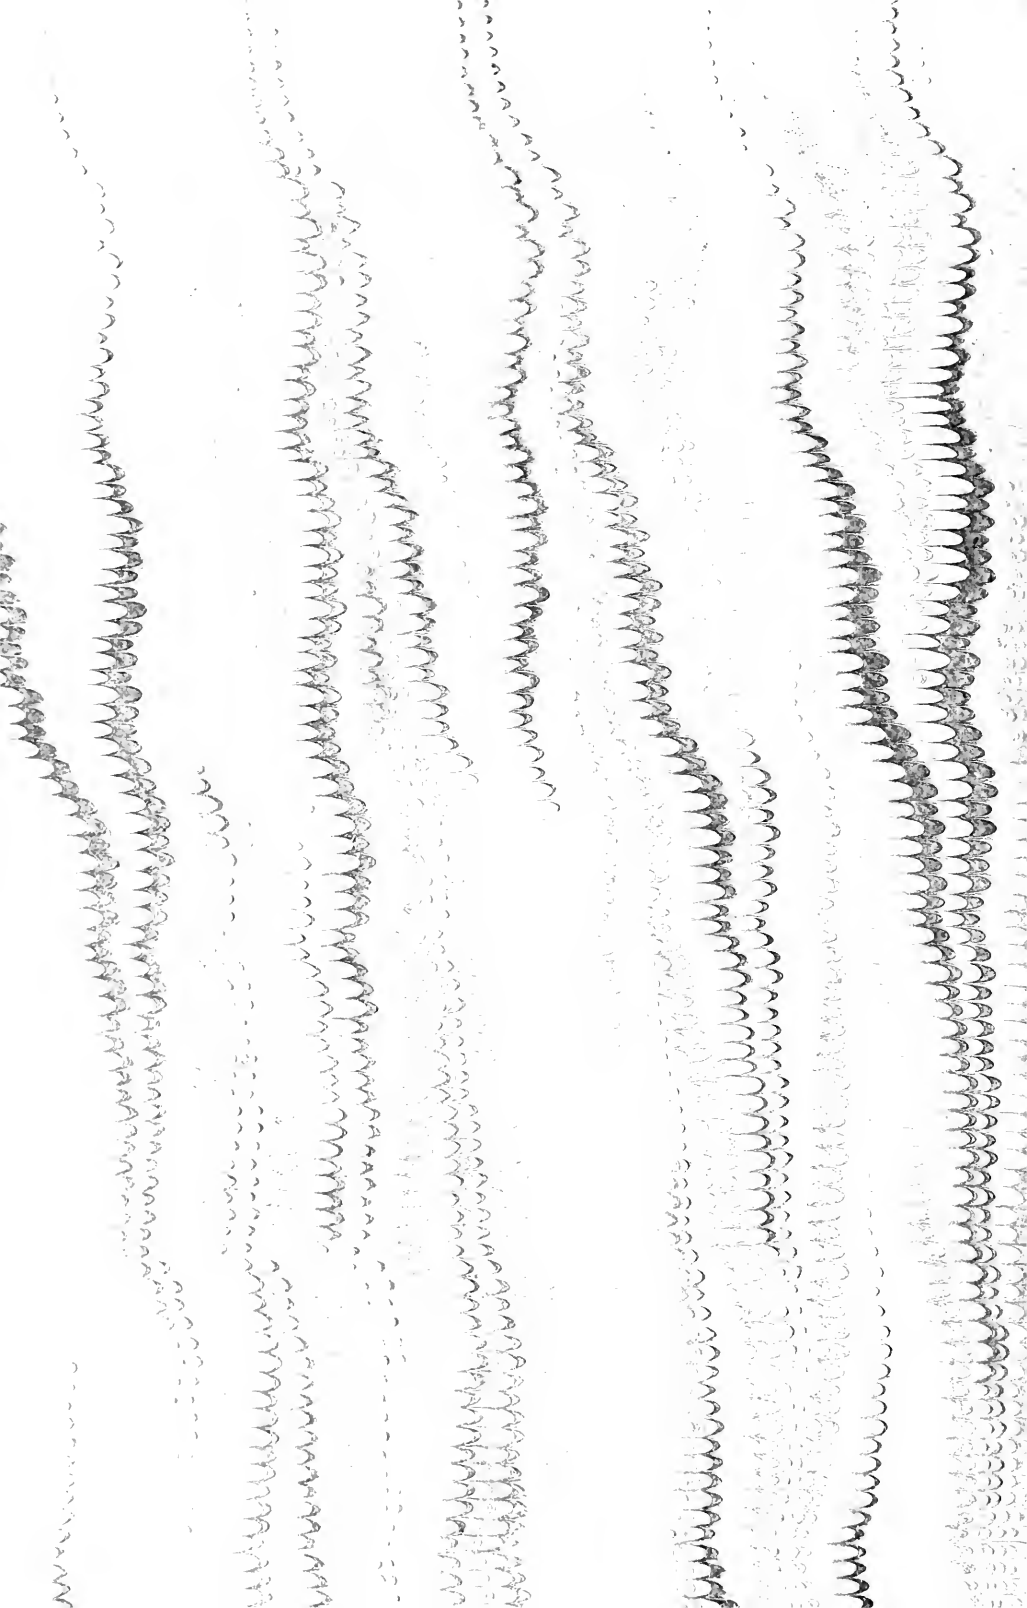

J. H. Perkins, '98, then offered the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

“Whereas, During the war with Spain many undergraduates and alumni of Harvard, impelled by their sense of patriotism, enlisted in the army and navy of the United States, and

“Whereas, In the loyal performance of their duty several met death,

“Therefore, We, their comrades and friends, to express our love for them and our pride in their happy memory, do

“Resolve, That a committee be appointed by the Chairman which shall be empowered to take such steps as may seem to it proper toward the erection of a worthy memorial at Harvard.”
